'You know you are doing something right when people speak of Liance as their own legal department.'

Robin Kooy

Robin has years of experience advising organisations both on legal and non-legal matters. Before becoming a lawyer, Robin worked for almost half a decade as an association executive for various professional and trade associations. Robin often acted as an external spokesperson for the press and government agencies and fulfilled the role of sparring partner for board members regarding matters of organisation strategy and public affairs.

After becoming a lawyer, Robin worked for large and small organisations in both profit and non-profit sectors, mainly in the areas of contract and company law. Next to that, he has an intimate understanding of Healthcare and government organisations.

Robin preferably works as a partner of the business in a fast paced atmosphere. He likes managing complex projects from start to finish, providing legal solutions that add value to the organisation.

Next to being a business lawyer in the Netherlands, Robin has also been admitted as an attorney of law to the Bar of Curacao.
